OUR CONSULAR SERVICE

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

Bureau of Statistics, presided over by those dots, scattered over every country represent something. They represent America's watchtowers of trade. The lookouts on these watchtowers are the men who are in the consular service of out the land, so to-day America sends out these men to spy out the fertile fields of international trade. And as Joshua brought back good tidings of a land where every good thing grew, so to-day the tidings of wonderful fields of business where Americans may go with their wares and get for themselves the milk

A decade ago our foreign trade was small. It was lin ited to the few great nations. The total exports and imports of the United States amounted to $1.815,000,000 in 1897; in 1907 it had reached the enormous total of $3,346,-000,000. The consuls of the United States remarkable share of making it possible. Wherever throughout the whole wide world there are business opportunities, the American government, with a fatherly care over the business man, has stationed a consul, and it is his duty to keep his eyes, his ears, and his mind open, ready as a sentinel on the outpost of an army to advise his government and its people of what the opportunity is and how it

The good the service has done is beyond calculation. That little publication, the Daily Consular Reports, gotten out by the Bureau of Manufactures, under the editorship of that veteran newspaper man, Maj. John H. Carson, teems with instances where openings may be had to sell American goods. Likewise it points out mistakes that have been made in handling trade to a given point, and always suggests the remedy. Many letters come to the Department of Commerce and Labor telling of what has been accomplished through tips received from the consular reports. One New England manufacturer of knives wanted to know the tions. addresses of some retail dealers in knives in England. His letter was referred to if the department approves the recoman American consul in that country. They do things thoroughly, as a rule, in the consular service, and the reply he received was no exception to the rule. He was given the names of hundreds of ing. Carrying coals to Newcastle may took French leave on Washington's Birthbe an idle job, but advices later received day, and went to Washington and re-by the Bureau of Manufacturers showed that sending knives to Sheffield was not a profitless one to the American manufacturer of cutiery. Another manufacturer got a tip from the consular report, John M. Prince, of Connecticut, fourth and a year or two later he advised the class, who engaged in a fistic fight at department that he had doubled his for- breakfast formation a few days ago.

EDUCATORS' PROCEEDINGS. Speech by Comimssioner Draper at Evening Session.

The reception and address by the President at the White House yesterday afternoon was the stellar feature of the convention of the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association. All special committee and society meetings were abandoned when the hour of 2:30 o'clock arrived. The entire body of pedagogues, men and women wearing their little blue badges, marched from their various quarters to the east entrance of the White House.

So eager were they to secure good places in the East Room that they caused a great jam at the doorways and on the by the White House attaches. After the reception the members of the convention returned to the meeting places of their various special societies and com mittees and took up the programme of
